Patricia Simonet (1959-2010) was an animal behaviorist and research scientist. She split her time between counseling pets and their humans, and researching the amazing behaviors of non-human animals.

Her research, "Laughing Dog: Recorded playback reduces stress related behavior in shelter dogs", has garnered worldwide attention. Patricia has appeared on Good Morning America, CNN, CBC, BBC, and NPR describing her original research.

Although, Patricia has studied elephants & chimps, and trained tigers & kangaroos, she held a special place in her heart for domestic cats & dogs.

Laughing Dog Research As Seen on:

Now you can have the Laughing Dog sound to play for your dog. A CD with 45 minutes of digitally recorded, Dog Laughter™ is now available for sale from PeTalk.

In 2001, Patricia Simonet, the Laughing Dog™ researcher, isolated sounds dogs produced while playing. The one vocalization that stood alone as a happy sound was the forced breathy exhalation, Dog Laughter™.

In 2005, Simonet, found that playing a recording of this sound to shelter dogs appeared to soothe them.
